

Clip 6 Transcript

What I say to, what I've learned is to trust your instincts, trust your gut, and have advisers. For when we moved to Ottawa, we had a family friend who grew up in Ottawa who could tell us this is where we need to go. There's a lot of research that can be done on this to reduce the information asymmetry. But having someone to kind of assist or at least kind of explain things. A bit someone that helps the matching, I guess, of the attributes of tenants and of the units landlords are selling because there's frictions there. And I feel like the frictions hurt neurodivergent people more than neurotypical people because the language and the features tend to be written, I don't want to say not truthfully, but there's a translation that needs to be done.